

Dandelion Mama Camp

Breathe. Believe. Be. - A weekend retreat with Sandy Swenson

As mothers of children suffering with addiction, we do battle with a disease that oozes misunderstanding and shame. Alone and afraid, we try to do the right thing—even when we're not sure what that right thing is. We try to hold our families and ourselves together, even when it feels like we're falling apart. We feel every pain our child feels, no matter the distance (in miles or years). We try to carry on, even when our heart is breaking in two. But, as tired and tattered as we may be, like the deceptively delicate dandelion, we moms are made to persevere.

Together, we will explore the topic of family, self, and what we actually have control over in this place where love and addiction meet. Together, we will find the power to overpower the destruction that addiction spreads.

We may often feel fragile, but we are Dandelion Mama Strong. Breathe. Believe. Be.

Sandy Swenson is the mother of two sons, one of whom struggles with addiction. For twenty years, she has been a voice of comfort and strength for other moms with children (of any age and stage) struggling with this disease, too—putting their thoughts and feelings into words and helping them to feel less alone. Her books include 'The Joey Song: A Mother's Story From the Place Where Love and Addiction Meet'; 'Tending Dandelions: Honest Meditations for Mothers with Addicted Children'; 'Readings for Moms of Addicts' app; and 'Just Dandy: Living with Heartache and Wishes'. Sandy is also the founder of the Facebook group Dandelion Mama Rocks. For moms of addicted children (and their loving supporters!), the mission of this group is to scatter some Dandelion Mama goodness by painting and hiding rocks with messages of love and support for other Dandelion Mamas (or anyone) to find.
